

THE BROTHERS MCMULLEN 3 - 1

HE

I know I'm gonna end up killing those two guys.

SHE

No you won't. You love them really.

Are you sure you're going to be okay with those two staying with us?

SHE

Jack, they're your brothers. You don't say no to family. I would do anything for them. Of course if Patrick decides to start wearing my underwear.

Which he might.

SHE

Which he might. Besides, I think we ought to start getting used to sharing this house with some other people.

I've already had plenty of practice in that department. Thank you very much.

SHE

Well you know, I'm not getting any younger, Jack. And you said that we would be having kids before I turned thirty. And in case you forgot, I turned thirty last week. And the only kids running around here are in their twenties.

Come on, Molly. Kids are a big step.

SHE

I know that. But I'm ready to make that step. I don't care if we have to make a few sacrifices.

THE BROTHERS MCMULLEN 3 - 2

Look, kids need money for food, clothing and medication. Do you know what that means? There would be no more vacations to Ireland to see your grandmother or my mother. No more trips to Aruba during winter recess. No more restaurants, we won't be able to afford it.

SHE

Well, good. Because I can't stand my grandmother, I hate Aruba and I'd rather cook. I want a family, Jack. I want a house that's teeming with little kids running up and down the stairs. You know, I want to cheer for them at baseball games and hold them when they scrape their knees. You said that's what you wanted too.

I do, I do. I still want those things. I just don't want to rush into it, you know? I just need to know that we're ready.

SHE

I'm ready, Jack. Let me know when you are too.
